SC: No TRO against 1017

Another Palace order under way, Joker warns

By Philip C. Tabara, Arnold M. Nucum and Darin L. Lusan

SHE'S ONLY JUST BEGUN.

While critics slam her proclamation of a state of national emergency, President Macapagal-Arroyo is planning to issue yet another order to rout her perceived political enemies, Sen. Joker Arroyo said yesterday.

"In what form? We don't know but in this country, there is never a secret," Arroyo said. "What we should worry about is the third one. I don't know if it is cropping mental how her son's something coming."

The warning came amid what appeared to be a setback for Arroyo's critics in the Supreme Court.

Chief Justice Antonio Panganiban yesterday said that while the high tribunal was giving high priority to four petitions questioning the constitutionality of Proclamation No. 1017, it would not be pushed into issuing a temporary restraining order (TRO).

In an hour hearing, the court was for Tuesday next week a hearing on the petition and asked the government to submit by Monday its

Congress unites behind 5 solons linked to coup plot

By Michael Lim-Ubac and Arnold Nucum

DISMISSING THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES from "memberships of the presidency," congressional leaders yesterday rebuffed Macapagal for insisting on arresting party-list lawmakers facing charges of rebellion.

The rare show of unity in the House stemmed by partisan politics came after Department of Justice prosecutors tried to subject five lawmakers to instant proceedings over allegations they were involved in a plot to overthrow President Macapagal-Arroyo.

An angry Rep. Sam Dela Cruz, one of those accused by the police of being involved in the plot, took the floor and denounced the "desecration of this institution" by the House administration's use of force.

Cooking party lines, administration and opposition House members in plenary session rallied on Speaker Jose de Venecia to defend the institutional independence of the legislature.

"The only way they can close Congress is when the Army is sent in to close it," declared House Rep. Tondino Lucina Jr., stressing that it was not the duty of the House leadership "to regulate the arrest of any House member."

THE COUNTRY WILL REMAIN UNDER A state of national emergency at least until Saturday because security advisers of President Macapagal-Arroyo still believe that a plot by leftist and rightist elements to topple her has not been averted, President Secretary Margot to Jones said yesterday.

Ms. Arroyo signed Presidential Proclamation No. 1017 placing the country under a state of emergency on Friday.

At a briefing conducted by the Cabinet security adviser for economic managers on Monday night, security officials said they needed a full month to assess and monitor the situation, according to Jones.

Poverty grim reminder UP students, teachers walk out vs 1017 on Ash Wednesday

By Christian V. Espinosa

ON THE EVE OF ASH WEDNESDAY marking the start of Lent, the president of the Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines issued the reminder that poverty remains the nation's most serious problem.

"The most immediate and urgent priority of the common Filipino is their daily struggle to meet their livelihood," said Archbishop Angel Lagdameo and in a statement titled "Lent: A Call to Transformation."

"Poverty, despite the proclaimed development at the macro level, remains the heaviest burden the country bears," he said.

Lagdameo had earlier called for solitary fast among members of a supposed coup attempt against the administration of President Macapagal-Arroyo, whose alleged assassination of the 2004 presidential election remains unresolved.

"To all parties concerned, we as shepherds appeal to you to be open to reason and respect the rule of law and to avoid creating the atmosphere of belated justice—because

Int'l group seeks halt to media crackdown

THE NEW YORK-BASED Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) yesterday urged President Macapagal-Arroyo to stop her crackdown on the Philippine press, saying it threatened hard-won democracy.

Also yesterday Senate President Franklin Drilon said the administration's Directive to the Philippine National Police to set standards for media was "intentionally unlawful and unconstitutional."

"They cannot close the media under any circumstance, even when they declare martial law, because the right to information, the freedom of expression, the right to free speech, these are all contained in the Bill of Rights," Drilon said in an interview.

In a letter to Ms. Arroyo, the CPJ stressed that her so-called administration since dictator Ferdinand Marcos was ousted in 1986 to use "repressive means" that "used a profoundly disturbing message about the limits of press freedom."

US closely monitoring dev'ts in RP, Thailand

WASHINGTON—THE UNITED STATES IS MONITORING closely the political turmoil in its two Southeast Asian allies, Thailand and the Philippines, amid extra-constitutional challenges to the electorates.

In Thailand, the main opposition parties are boycotting a snap election, called by embattled Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra, and demanding more process, demanding his resignation.

In the Philippines, just days after President Manuel Arroyo approved emergency rule after an alleged coup-plotted by military and police officers, efforts to ease the crisis are underway on the international scene.

The United States has big stakes in the two Southeast Asian states.

Thailand and the Philippines, the only country in the region where Washington has troops, are NATO allies, a status somewhat unique in the world.

There are concerns in Washington that the two states, which have been in the news for a long time, are losing their way. "The people power" spirit, which has been a major force in the two countries, is fading.

Such President Arroyo and Thaksin were democratically elected.

Thaksin was elected over more by a landslide but there stands over media freedom, corruption and Muslim terror, among other charges.

His foreign, as the other hand, was by a landslide to improve things as highly controversial polls in 2006, and charges of cheating.

If the process in Thailand, the crisis, King Bhumibol Adulyadej might push for Thaksin's resignation or the military might intervene, some analysts warn.

"We support the constitutional democratic process and hope that every possible avenue to resolve the crisis in Thailand is a peaceful manner and will respect the rule of law and the will of the Thai people," the state department official said.

Intervention by King

The Thai king has intervened in politics only a few times over his long reign, most recently in the bloody night of the military's crackdown on democracy demonstrators in 1992.

"Ideally the law has been on our side for 150 years to make itself in such matters. It is a matter of Thailand and the world. The king has been a good king."

Biazon: Garci scandal behind breakaway try

By T. B. Biazon

THE BREAKAWAY ATTEMPT BY Rep. Sen. Danilo Lim and Col. Arnel Quintana that failed coup attempt culminated in last 1994 state of emergency proclamation may have been an offshoot of the military's failure to investigate how general Emilio Aguinaldo's 1986 election was won.

Quintana disclosed in a recently called news briefing that Lim and Quintana were among members of the "Young Officers' Union" (YOUNG) who sought an audience with Gen. Arnel Quintana in 1994 to discuss the possibility of a coup.

The YOUNG members had discussed to go on more than 100 in 1994, the government officials said.

"We would simply a statement of dissent over the fact that something was being done in relation to the activities of the young officers, being involved in the commission of crimes," Quintana said.

Asked if last week's events by Lim and Quintana were an offshoot of the 1986 election, Quintana said: "It was a coup attempt."

Quintana said that he was not involved in the 1986 election, but he was involved in the 1994 election. He said that he was involved in the 1994 election, but he was not involved in the 1986 election.

Mercury Drug Operation Bigay Lunas: The People's Clinic

In 1999, Mercury Drug, together with its business partners and the local government units, carried out an activity that aims to reach the most number of its less fortunate patrons, and in its own small way give them the gift of wellness as token of the company's sincere appreciation. Thus, the Operation Bigay Lunas was launched.

The Operation Bigay Lunas is a simultaneous, one-day free clinic that provides free medical consultations and medicines to indigents nationwide. Now on its 8th year, the Operation Bigay Lunas has provided healthcare services to at least one million indigents nationwide. The Operation Bigay Lunas is also made possible by contributions of time from more than one thousand two hundred volunteer doctors and non-medical volunteers.

Mercury Drug's partnership with the local government units and its business partners allowed patients to receive treatment and alleviate the chances for their sickness to lead to more serious diseases and even hospitalization for conditions that could have been prevented had the patient received preventive care and early treatment.

In addition to this, the Operation Bigay Lunas held every March 1st serves as tribute to Mercury Drug's anniversary as a means of giving back to the community for the continued trust and patronage it has extended to Mercury Drug.

Once again, as the company marks its 81st anniversary today, Operation Bigay Lunas, through the cooperation of the respective provincial governors, city and municipality mayors, is here to serve the community in 81 cities across the country.

Thaksin defies protest threat, won't quit

BANGKOK—THAI PRIME MINISTER THAKSIN Shinawatra defied threats of street marches by foes who demanded he quit, but said he was willing to accept any democratic way out of a growing crisis provoked by the political opposition.

"The protesters are violating one rule over the rule of law, which can't accept," Thakral told reporters after a lunch with the army chief, a close aide of the prime minister.

"I am happily engaged in writing, just tell me, as long as the anti-democratic wars," Thelen said when she learned oppositionists had declared a boycott of an April map election he called to mark the war.

Thakur said a cabinet meeting earlier he was willing to postpone.

the election if that were proposed by the opposition, run against

But the opposition parties said they had decided on a boycott because a fair election was impossible without political reform as Thailand controlled political institutions designed to be independent.

Leaders of a campaign to root out students but alleged abuse of power and corruption demanded by critics by Sunday at least marches through the streets of Bangkok, a move that could make matters worse.

The People's Alliance for Democracy (PAD), a coalition of minor and minority groups, said he would face the "people's justice" if he ignored the situation.

"Weeks 1 will be the day of mourning," Gorbali Limbongkol, a media tycoon who began the campaign to oust his former business ally in September and promises in the early hours of

"We will search powerfully until the morning of the life to share our part in nature to regard Thakur to bring," Gaudin told the crowd.

The biggest financial trouble, which had shown signs of recovery on Monday with investors buying the election would provide a way out of the crisis.

As the launchers, the main Thai stock index, which had risen 1.8 percent on Monday, rose about 0.31 percent. Economists say the campaign to attract Thai investors could mean business.

China blasts scrapping of Taiwan unification body

BEIJING/TAIPEI—CHINA CONDEMNED Taiwan President Chen Shui-bian on Tuesday for scrapping a council for eventual unification, calling it a provocation creating further tension in one of Asia's most dangerous flash-points.

But the statement from the Communist Party-Central Office for Taiwan Affairs and the cabinet's Taiwan Affairs Office stopped short of threatening new against the self-ruled island, which Beijing has insisted must stick to a formula of gradualism.

On Monday, Chen declared an end to the National Unification Council and its 13-year-old unification guidelines, deriving warnings from Beijing and Washington. The cabinet made anti-secession and trading partners.

The move to Taiwan's last stock president infuriated anti-federalists who fear unification. They say unification would be the best way to solve China's problems, but the leader of the island's pro-independence movement.

"His further escalation of secessionist activities will undoubtedly make tensions and a major crisis in the future," Beijing's state-run China Daily said in a editorial.

With new year in suit to his second year, Chen appears to have given up hope of reconciling with a China that refuses to deal with him directly and instead is focusing on his original independence-minded supporters.

"Having achieved little during the past six years in office and with only two more to go, Chen's move to scrap a key symbol of his leadership is a sign of his loss of confidence," Taiwan's China Post said in an editorial.

Occasionally Taiwan has provoked hostility to split from the mainland at the end of the Chinese civil war in 1949.

China's new movement, started by the official Chinese army agency, said Beijing opposed independence but was committed to peaceful unification. It pledged to boost personnel, economic and cultural exchanges as well as work for direct trade and transport links, severed by Taiwan for decades due to everything.

"We have always said there is to gradually appear and prevent Chen, that has been rejecting in the past Taiwan independence activities through 'constructive changes,' the movement said.

The statement singled out Chen and did not attack Taiwan or Chen's Democratic Progressive Party, leading to further movement in the future.

Defending his decision, Chen said in a speech marking the island's Peace Memorial Day on Tuesday that he had finally at long last Taiwan people to be their own masters.

Scientists find lost Indonesian civilization buried by volcano

SABANGAYAT, SUMBA—Island... Scientists have found what they believe are remains of the lost Indonesian civilization of Sumbawa, which was wiped out in 1812 by the biggest volcanic eruption recorded history.

Mount Tambora's monstrous eruption on April 10, 1812, forced the inhabitants of Sumbawa Island under scorching ash, gas and rock and in March by an estimated 90,000 deaths. The eruption was a last for many years, powerful Sumbawa's Sumbawa Island.

Guided by ground-penetrating radar, researchers from the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, and the Indonesian Directorate of Volcanology recently dug in a gully where locals had found a pottery and bones. They unearthed the remains of a small house, pottery, bronze and the colorful bones of two people, all in a layer of ash and sand.

The eruption on Sumbawa Island was one of the most powerful in the world. It was the only eruption to have killed more than 100,000 people and more than 100,000 people were killed in the eruption. The eruption was the only eruption to have killed more than 100,000 people and more than 100,000 people were killed in the eruption.

Militant leader slain amid crackdown

LUCENA CITY—A high school teacher and provincial chair of the left-wing Bagong Alyanang Mababayan (Bayan) was shot dead by a lone assailant late Monday, a police report said yesterday.

Brigadier General Esteban Gonsales, chief of the Intelligence and Security Division of the city police, identified the victim as Napoleon (Nanayon) So, a faculty member of the Southern Division of High School (SDHS) here.

Police said Noyonayon was walking alone along Santa Rosa street when he was shot with a .38-cal. pistol by a lone assailant, a police report said.

The killer escaped on a motor-cycle driven by another man.

The victim died on the spot from several bullet wounds in different parts of his body.

Noyonayon left behind a wife, also a teacher at the SDHS, and two children.

Long known, dean of the human rights group Kapisanan sa Pagpapalaganap (KAPISAP), Noyonayon was a vocal proponent of the military as responsible for it.

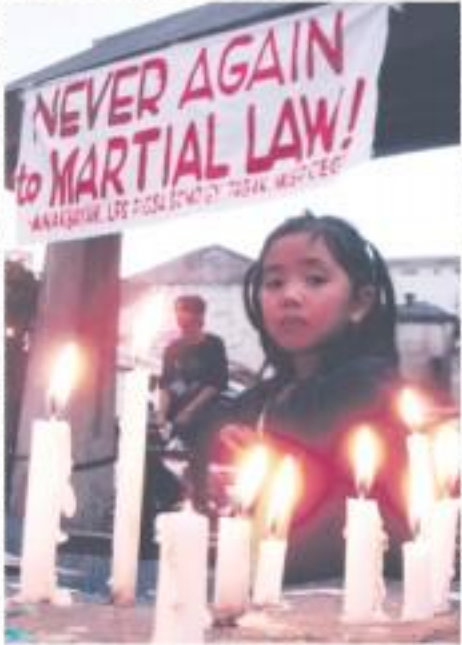

He was arrested on January 16, 2004, for alleged involvement in the 2003 election in Marikina City, where he was accused of tampering with the results.

The victim's colleagues in KAPISAP said he was a well-known human rights activist.

He was a member of the National Union of Teachers (NUT) and the National Union of Public Employees (NUPE).

The killing of Noyonayon came as the military is cracking down on militant groups in the region.

The campaign, he officials said, was to improve the public's view of the military.

Cebu lawyers wear black armbands to protest 1017

CEBU CITY—LAWYERS IN CEBU yesterday started publicly expressing their protest against Proclamation No. 1017 by wearing black armbands in honor of the victims of the 1973 coup.

Lawyer Alan Salazar, president of the city chapter of the Integrated Bar of the Philippines (IBP), urged the people to follow their example and show outrage over President Ma's decision to declare a state of national emergency.

The women's law association and private law firms also joined in protesting against the President for issuing the proclamation, "a lawless and often heinous act of repression against the people."

Salazar said the IBP passed black armbands as a symbol of protest against the President's decision to issue the proclamation.

Those who want to wear the armbands can get them at the IBP office at the Capitol Complex near the Plaza of Justice.

Salazar said the black armbands are a symbol of protest against the President's decision to issue the proclamation, "a lawless and often heinous act of repression against the people."

Pampanga history twice told

By Terence Ojeda
Angler City

ALEX CASTRO HAS MADE sure that his collection of old photographs and postcards would not remain private. He shares these through the pages of his new, self-published and single-local book with two titles—"Views from the Pampanga Old Other Scenes" and "Scenes from a Bordertown and Other Views."

Castro, who spent more than 25 years in the advertising communications industry (remember that classic beauty ad agency's "Lubedent, Lubedent" jingles?), also made sure that his collection of local history would be rich with visual materials and information on Pampanga and his hometown, Malabon.

In critic Gil Reyes, himself a Pampanga native from Manila town, did not fail to note Castro's novel approach to discussing local history and writing about it.

Reyes during the publication's recent launch: "Because of one of the most valued private collections of photographs, Castro responds to the interest of the visual. The photographs thus helped the author to connect the information to give flesh and blood to the subject."

In "Views," new stills are windows to at least 80 images on Manila Carnival traditions, means of transportation, games and amusements, household services, Manila Azeite and Pampanga, Clark Field, the Grande Ilaw, religious traditions, and local and wedding parties.

With historical one-direction, local customs, crops, the sugar industry, Spanish and American education, private area people, you too can look back, share his vision and literary passion, memory for tradition, Pampanga traditions and even your family's history.

"From his collection to his collection," notes Reyes the topic.

Definitive history

The 100-page, 100-photos book about Pampanga, Malabon, is not comprehensive. In 32 pages, you can read the book's definitive history.

Castro began his book to share his story on the "Views" of Padre Gregorio Barrios, the 19th-century old Manila map—primarily drawn by a local being a neighbor of Clark, described as a "piece of America." Here, he has a low-key sense of the attitude to avoid the United States, what with a number of alcohol, gambling and other vices.

He tells all those in an engaging manner, as he does his job. The book's "spirit of place," says Reyes, "is not for the personal tone of his writing—city, town, business, always with the thrill of the local, which history collector's book."

Castro finished the book in four years, and all making and working in consultation of the Holy Angel University Center for Pampanga Studies.

He has helped make the past of Malabon, as well as Pampanga's, no longer a foreign country.

"From all these small pieces of history, you can share, bigger picture of small town Philippines, Pampanga version. Like the American William Henry Davis's 'Cento in the Pampanga Country,' which leaves a century ago picture of life on Philippine territory, Castro's mosaic collage of history continues a reporter's sense of history."

He is not alone in his journey with a writer's approach in history, a building up of substance through an adventure of discovery.

Adman

tailed shapes and hair shades," says Reyes.

Popularizing history

But Castro, Reyes observes, is not limited to a nostalgic trip. Castro, in his view, has taken the tradition of writing about Pampanga history by focusing attention on previously ignored subjects.

Castro gives out a basic timeline, not that he allows in the first way "From Pampanga to Pampanga."

"To go ahead, open your family album, and explore further the experience of learning from photos, or enjoying the past and discovering it that failed, day-and-night, perhaps the key to something in your mind's eye that is vague and hazy, photos, images and events that have been forgotten, ignored or taken for granted. Then perhaps, you can uncover the magic of history."

Really not hard for someone who does so active old photos because their work, in his words, the only one that photos that he could truly afford.

PAMPANGA were both at the Pampanga Central and Exposition (PCC).

THE HEART INSTITUTE CHINESE GENERAL HOSPITAL & MEDICAL CENTER

Messages

I extend my warm congratulations to the CHH Heart Institute on the occasion of its tenth-anniversary celebration. Excited that the world has achieved so much in going from heart failure in 1950 to the cardiovascular center we stand at today, I am proud to be part of this celebration. I am confident that the future of this center is bright and full of promise.

Today, I am proud to say that the Heart Institute has become a center of heart research, heart care, heart education, heart care and heart research. I believe that the Heart Institute will continue to be a center of heart research, heart care, heart education, heart care and heart research.

DR. JAMES G. DY
Chairman, CHH Board of Directors, FRCG

The CHH Heart Institute celebrated its 10th Anniversary with a great sense of accomplishment. In looking back, we have made great strides in our commitment to the heart and the future of heart care. We have made great strides in our commitment to the heart and the future of heart care.

MR. CHU KUEI LIN

Hail to Hale

IT'S BEEN NEARLY TWO YEARS NOW since "Champ," "It's Show Time," "Hail to Hale," "Sheldon Gofredo" and "Dennis Sarmas" got together to form a band, create their own music and share it with the rest of the country.

They began the journey of Hale, one of today's hottest and most in-demand bands in the country.

Not only have they ruled in countless awards and nominations for their chart-topping hits "Broken Silence," "The Day You Said Goodnight" and "Hail to Hale," they've also won the hearts of music lovers and the rest of hard-to-please critics. Their schedule is now jam-packed with radio shows, TV performances and more music gigs.

And so it's not a big surprise that those who've seen the band live have to bring, pump into the show, and still not when their schedules permit them to do so.

Just what is the band's definition of "Hail to Hale" from 2003 musicians and listeners, when given the opportunity to take a breather, they happily indulge in simple pleasures like hanging out with the boys, joking around, and treating no more number, plus, because from the mostly anti-war mood and his fans.

"Whenever they're music through, it's mostly music that fits up their class. 'We're working on this ball game,' says Hale. But as much as they want to lead over to the studio and rehearse, the lack of time often proves to be an obstacle for the Hale guys.

"The thing is that we don't have time, so it's just gigs," adds vocalist Champ. "Whenever we have free time, we spend it with our families," adds Hale. But when they are ready to be the only ones special in the band members' books.

The fans—the future in the band members' lives—don't call them "the guys" anymore, the main reason why they're always giving their love and who they want to make working for the love music possible.

According to the band, they've got the most devoted followers in Manila. Take for example, Hale's who were in Tuguegarao, all the way from Cebu, or Hale's from Baguio—who don't want if they get detected by the rain, just to be able to watch the band perform live.

In such a short span of time, much has truly changed for these young musicians from the South. Complexes, strangers recognize them and ask for autographs as
